English

- ✓ Multiple Intelligences: The course offers a variety in the components that have been formulated keeping in mind the different modalities that the learners may use to acquire language.
- ✓ Higher-Order Thinking Skills (HOTS): The questions pertaining to higher-order thinking skills persuade the learners to think beyond the text, which helps them learn how to discern and focus on the profundity beneath the superficial.
- ✓ Life Skills: The questions pertaining to life skills enable and, more importantly, empower the learners to apply the heuristic messages of the text to their own lives and the world around them.
- ✓ Formative Assessment: The tasks of formative assessments help the teachers assess the learners' in-process academic progression. This helps the teacher identify the skills the learners have difficulty acquiring. Support can then be provided to the learners, and instructional techniques can furthermore be accordingly modified.
- ✓ Summative Assessment: The summative assessment gives the teacher an evaluative tool to gauge the learners' academic achievement at the end of the designated instructional period.
- ✓ Assessment of Speaking and Listening (ASL): The primary objective of a language course is to equip learners with a functional knowledge of the language. The assessment of the speaking and listening skills becomes especially important in an ESL context. The ASL tasks in the chapters are complemented by additional ASL tasks, all of which act as instruments for the teacher to analyse the language-learning abilities of the learners.
- ✓ Problem-Solving Assessment (PSA): The activities of PSA aim to provide the learners with the skills of deductive reasoning and critical thinking so that they are able to deal with real-life situations in a more conclusive and methodical manner.
- ✓ Open Text-Based Assessment (OTBA): For overall learning, the development of a learner's systematic, interpretive and conceptual skills becomes essential as opposed to rote memorisation, and the OTBA provides the teacher with a tool to assess these skills.
